

A Scent of Pushback in the Air

Consider, briefly, three recent nooze stories.

*London government employs goons in skull masks—“outside contractors, highly professional,” LOL—to combat citizens who have stolen or damaged some 1,000 spy-cams in “Ultra-Low Emissions Zones”. They’ve been charging special fees to drive “non-compliant vehicles” in those neighborhoods—they want you driving an electric car that you can’t afford. People are quite ticked off about it. But of course if a couple of masked thugs put you in the hospital, how are you going to identify them?

*Argentina elects Javier Milei, “the Donald Trump of South America,” in a landslide; and the new president immediately sacks 5,000 deep state bureaucrats and 12 out of 21 cabinet members. Noozies lament.

*Geert Wilders—they’ve been trying to bury him for years!—has been elected prime minister of the Netherlands. Wilders has embarked on an anti-globalist campaign and they haven’t found a way to stop him. For the time being, at least, the fun’s over: back to sanity.

2024 in America will be make-or-break for all concerned. Either we will save our republic by kicking Democrats out of office, or damage it beyond repair by allowing them to stay in power. Will they come up with another pandemic? More lockdowns? Vote-by-mail, again? “Well dog my cats—400 million votes for Biden! Looks like we’ve got another Mandate!” It worked in 2020. Honk if you think that election was on the level.

There is a scent of pushback in the air. Pushback—against what? How about, for starters, masses of illegal aliens swarming across our border, public schools pushing “transgender” like their lives depended on it, universities rooting for Hamas, wars popping up all over the place and us plebs called upon to pay for them, government colluding with social media platforms to suppress and censor all opposition... little things like that.

And let’s not forget what we saw in Sri Lanka in 2022: angry mobs forcing their way into the presidential palace, with the hated president fleeing for his life: the government’s crazy economic policies to blame.

As Plutarch once said, the tyrant has a nice high perch, but there’s no safe way down from it.

Our country’s Far Left Crazy leadership has labored tirelessly for years to turn America into a pyramid with themselves up there on the pinnacle and the rest of us down there at the bottom, barely able to breathe for the weight on top of us. They want a global government, with themselves as gods and kings. It’s so close now, they can just about taste it. “Push, push! One more push and we’ve got it! Power and wealth beyond our wildest dreams!”

But they’re also acting like they’re afraid. Do they smell pushback, too? Is it beginning to dawn on them that we hate them and reject their program? Do they have some doubt that they can win this year’s presidential election—that all the tricks that worked for them in 2020 won’t work again? Look at the massive lawfare they’re waging against President Trump.

Would they be doing that if they didn't fear him winning back the White House? We can't blame them for worrying about payback: they certainly deserve it. If Argentina and the Netherlands can elect Javier Milei and Geert Wilders, surely we can bring home a win for Donald Trump.

They've been sitting on that nice high perch for going on four years—and it's a long way down from there. They might not be able to recover from such a fall. Say goodbye to global government. Give up hope of creating a new electorate who will obey them in return for free stuff. Teachers' unions, homeschooling's going to make you obsolete; and you won't have the FBI spying on your critics anymore.

It won't be easy to bring down the Woke pyramid; they'll fight for their privileges with everything they've got, and they won't fight clean.

But it simply has to be done.
