

American Parents, Fight For Your Children

For at least five years, American government school educators have been indoctrinating students. The long ago abandoned the concept of making sure the young Americans receive the best education possible. No longer are most educators making sure their students are tops in math, science, American history, language skills, etc. Now their focus is anti gun rights, a 57 variety of sexes and gender bending, hatred toward the United States, Christianity, fatherhood and the free market. In fact, many educators proudly instruct elementary students on how to have oral sex and sexually pleasure each other in other ways.

Finally, some parents have had enough. Many throughout the United States and beyond are beginning to turn their quiet frustration into bold action. Admittedly, some parents have tried to quietly express their disappointment in the demented direction government schools have taken. To add insult to injury, American taxpayers fork over more money per student than almost every other nation on earth. But unfortunately, Students in this republic are among the least truly educated yet most indoctrinated. Through the years I have identified the government school system as the number one enemy of the United States of America.

For the first time in American history, most college students believe is ok to destroy the free speech of those who for example likes America and President Trump. On college campi throughout the land if someone simply wares a MAGA hat, they may be beaten into a coma. That kind of behavior is permissible, as long it is pro American, pro legal immigration, pro Trump supporters, etc. being beaten and deprived of their right of freedom of expression. The root of moral corruption is deeply ensconced within government schools and are morally destructive to students before nine years of age. Students are now indoctrinated with material that would make many adults blush from embarrassment.

It is horrible that tax paying Americans are coerced into paying for curriculum and recourses that instruct dangerous and promiscuous behaviors that most parents find morally abhorrent. The Centers for Disease Control has stated the activities now being taught in government schools are a health risk. I personally find it reprehensible that school administrators and their educators act as if they have more authority over the children they indoctrinate, than the parents who birthed them.

I thank God more parents are coming out of the shadows and refusing to allow their children to be indoctrinated into perverts. A grassroots movement of frustrated government school parents is morphing their frustration into real action. The parents rightfully want an end to sexualizing their children and a return to properly teaching them in the class room. To further make their point, parents are conducting a "Sex Ed Sit Out" protest on Monday April 23rd 2018. The protest was the brainchild of a few mothers who were communicating on social media about their displeasure over the graphic nature of current sex education resources in government schools.

It has grown into a global movement with protests being planned in the United States, Canada and Australia. Parents are livid in cities like Fairfax, Virginia and Rocklin, California where they have been featured in news reports for being hotbeds of controversial, gender-bending, sick graphic sex education and anti-bullying programs. Parents were not informed that these "subjects" would be taught to their children, sometimes as young as five years old. Personally, I am encouraged to see that parents are beginning to get directly involved in the battle to restore true education in America. We owe them a debt of gratitude. But one cannot lay the total blame of the current “state of affairs” at the feet of school educators and administrators.

Parents in general must reclaim their God given responsibility of parenthood, by properly carrying out their duties as their children’s first teachers. Whether they realize it or not, our republic is a reflection of it’s families and that includes our schools. Without strong families and Providential guidance, the fall of our republic will be fast upon us. But it can be avoided if “We the People” are willing to stop the mental abuse and spiritual corruption of America’s young people. God bless you, God Bless America and may America bless God.
