

Conservatives take their party back 2016

D.C. insiders are in total panic mode, increasingly aware that they are fast losing total RINO control of the Republican Party they have worked so hard for so long to destroy. They will come after Trump (and his conservative base supporters) with everything including the kitchen sink... But the more they do it, the more popular Trump becomes...

The RINO class is coming after Trump with everything they can muster. They are going so far as to openly denounce Trump (their clear front-runner) and his "angry grassroots supporters" on Fox News and other platforms. They floated a known lie accusing Trump of being a KKK member who had the endorsement of one-time KKK member David Duke. Duke immediately came out and denied ever endorsing Trump, which the RINO media has not been so fast to report.

Romney, one of the most unpopular individuals to ever win the GOP nomination which left at least six-million GOP voters sitting at home in 2012, is being trotted out to attack Trump, now saying the exact opposite he said about Trump when he accepted Trumps endorsement and money in 2012.

In short, there is an all-out war for future control of the Republican Party, being waged by the conservative base of the party through Trump, and the D.C. establishment globalists via two constitutionally ineligible candidates from the U.S. Senate, Cruz and Rubio.

The simple truth is, Cruz and Rubio have no constitutional right to even appear on any presidential ballot. Neither is a "natural born Citizen" of the United States. However, this is of no concern to D.C. insiders or their friends in the so-called media, who are dependent upon D.C. associations for their own wealth and power.

Trump is popular among conservative Americans for one simple reason... he is the anti-everyone else. So, Trump will be the GOP nominee, because the D.C. establishment has so wrecked and divided the GOP electorate that they can no longer trick GOP conservatives into supporting globalist candidates like McCain, Romney, Cruz or Rubio.

Angry Conservatives using Trump to retake control of the Republican Party

Only two GOP candidates are in the race now... Trump and Cruz... no one else has any chance at all of winning the GOP nomination.

CANDIDATE Pop Vote % Delegates %

Trump 3,285,545 36.9% 319 46.4%

Cruz 2,853,490 32.1% 226 32.8%

Rubio 1,569,808 17.6% 110 16.0%

Kasich 644,400 7.2% 25 3.6%

Carson 546,671 6.1% 8 1.2%

Carson has since dropped out of the race... Kasich and Rubio are already out of the race, although both will stay in and raise money through March 15th primaries... Rubio needing to win his home state of Florida and Kasich needing to win his home state of Ohio.

As for Cruz, 43.4% of Ted's total popular vote count came from Texas alone, as did nearly 50% of Ted's total delegate count. Take Texas out of the equation and no one is in the race against Trump.

The RINO establishment is in total panic mode. They have already lost RINO control of the Republican Party to the Trump movement, which is the conservative base of the Republican Party that is fed up with the RINO establishment that has spent years purging conservatives from the Republican Party and shifting the party further and further to the progressive left.

Cruz just had the best day he will ever have, in his home state of Texas. Satan could be running and if Satan were from Texas, Texans would vote for Satan... Texan's will vote for any Texan, as proven by their support of Canadian Ted Cruz on Super Tuesday. (NOTE: 56.2% of Texas GOP voters voted against Ted Cruz)

National Republican Party leadership is running out of tricks. Even as I write today, Republicans in the House are more concerned with finding a way to destroy their own party front-runner than how to stop Obama's ongoing destruction of our beloved country.

Although nearly every House Republican has used the words "treason" and "impeachment" in reference to Obama, not one House Republican has had the courage to launch Articles of Impeachment or even a serious House investigation into known impeachable offenses. The GOP is in total suicide mode...

While they target Trump, Obama runs the country off a cliff totally unchallenged by lame-duck Republicans in control of the House and Senate. Republicans were supposed to de-fund Obama since 2010 and have de-funded nothing, allowing the country to be driven to more than $20 trillion in debt.

Republicans said they would impeach once they controlled the Senate. But nothing, not after the Iran deal, not after redefining marriage, not even after ignoring court orders to stop his illegal amnesty, nothing... since Republicans were given control of congress, they have done absolutely nothing with that power.

As a result, conservatives across America want a total new direction for their party and our country. They want a Republican Party that is pro-America, pro-capitalism, pro-national sovereignty and security, pro-military and pro-conservative grassroots.

The Tea Party allowed itself to be co-opted by the RNC power structure and hoodwinked into supporting Republicans that had no intention of keeping their promises to the grassroots people who put them in power.

I do not endorse candidates at all... but clearly, American conservatives have chosen Trump to carry their conservative agenda to D.C., a bastion of globalist elites no longer representing the will of the American people in either political party.

It had to happen sooner or later. Someone had to come along from outside of the system who would turn the system on its head. All election results point to Trump as that person and no one else is really even in the running. Before the people are forced to abolish and start all over again, they are hitting the reset button with Trump.

D.C. still does not "get it..." though. The 2016 GOP nomination is not about who Trump is, but rather who and what Trump isn't. He's not one of them... and that's all the people care about now.

Trump is upsetting the D.C. apple cart... and not a moment too soon!
