

Did we lose the culture war?

The reports of my death have been greatly exaggerated. –Mark Twain.

After the fall of the Soviet Union, the Russians finally realized that they had been given the short end of the stick and began fighting their new oppressors, the IMF, World Bank and transnational corporations.[1] Angered by their reaction, U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry (CFR) told them: “You lost the Cold War. Get Over It.”

In a similar fashion, Harvard Professor Mark Tushnet recently posted in his blog an entry entitled “Abandoning Defensive Crouch Liberal Constitutionalism,” in which he claims that we, the American people, have lost the culture war, and advises the winners to give us the same treatment given to the Germans and Japanese after they lost WWII.[2]

In his post, Professor Tushnet defines what he calls “Defensive Crouch Liberal Constitutionalism” as a way of acting in which “every liberal position asserted nervously, its proponents looking over their shoulders for retaliation by conservatives (in its elevated forms, fear of a backlash against aggressively liberal positions)”[3]

In his arrogance, however, Kerry forgot that the Russians had defeated the Nazis in WWII and the fool professor apparently has forgotten that, contrary to the Germans and the Japanese after WWII, the Americans he claims have lost the culture war own millions of firearms and are ready to use them. He also forgot Mao’s dictum that power comes out of the barrel of a gun.

According to Tushnet,

The culture wars are over; they lost, we won. ... For liberals, the question now is how to deal with the losers in the culture wars. That's mostly a question of tactics. My own judgment is that taking a hard line ("You lost, live with it") is better than trying to accommodate the losers, who – remember – defended, and are defending, positions that liberals regard as having no normative pull at all. Trying to be nice to the losers didn't work well after the Civil War ... (And taking a hard line seemed to work reasonably well in Germany and Japan after 1945.) I should note that LGBT activists in particular seem to have settled on the hard-line approach, while some liberal academics defend more accommodating approaches. When specific battles in the culture wars were being fought, it might have made sense to try to be accommodating after a local victory, because other related fights were going on, and a hard line might have stiffened the opposition in those fights. But the war's over, and we won.[4]

Of course, Professor Tushnet posted his hateful piece of trash on May 6, 2016, that is, before the Brexit and the surge of Donald Trump's popularity. So, paraphrasing Mark Twain I can say that the reports that we lost the Culture War have been greatly exaggerated. Nevertheless, we have to recognize that, until recently, we were losing the Culture War, and the reason for it was because most of us didn't realize that we were at war at all.

What we are currently experiencing is the final steps of a long, protracted war against the American people. It began a century ago in Woodrow Wilson's era, or perhaps even before, when the battleship Maine was mysteriously blown up in Havana's bay, and this war has not abated. This is not a conventional war waged with tanks, battleships and planes in conventional battlefields – at least not yet.

It is a secret, insidious type of war whose main battleground is the people's minds. Its main weapons are propaganda and mass brainwashing mostly by using disinformation, deception and lies on a large scale not used against the people of a nation since the end of Nazi Germany. Though important, those elements are just part of a series of carefully planned and executed long and short-term psychological warfare operations.

The reason why the CFR conspirators have resorted to defeat the American people using a much more devious form of war, a PsyWar, is because Americans love freedom and are armed to the teeth to defend their freedom.[5]

Now, what is a PsyWar? According to the U.S. Army's Joint Strategic Plans Committee, August 2, 1948, Psychological warfare employs all moral and physical means, other than orthodox military operations, which tend to:

destroy the will and the ability of the enemy to fight;
deprive him of the support of his allies and neutrals;
increase in our own troops and allies the will to victory.

Psychological warfare employs any weapon to influence the mind of the enemy. The weapons are psychological only in the effect they produce and not because of the nature of the weapons themselves. In this light, overt (white), covert (black), and gray propaganda; subversion; sabotage; special operations; guerrilla warfare; espionage's political, cultural, economic, and racial pressures are all effective weapons. They are effective because they produce dissention, distrust, fear and hopelessness in the minds of the enemy, not because they originate in the psyche of propaganda or psychological warfare agencies.[6]

Of late, however, particularly after the 9/11 events and even more after Barry Soetoro moved to the White House,[7] the existence of this conspiracy has become more evident for anybody with eyes to see. This is only because the conspirators were so confident that they were so close to their goal that, in their arrogance, they became careless. They despise us so much that they didn't care about what we can do to defend ourselves from their devious attack.

Nevertheless, despite that the existence of this conspiracy became obvious and most people suspected that something was very wrong, still a large percentage of the American people were unable to pinpoint the true source of the conspiracy. Most of them had been brainwashed to believe that just by changing the treacherous rascals in Washington D.C. everything would be okay.

That was the mistake made by the Republicans in 2000, when they got rid of Clinton to have Bush, and by the Democrats in 2008, when they trashed Bush to get Obama. But, as the true liberals in the Democratic Party soon found out, just by changing the puppets and leaving the puppet-masters untouched would not solve the problem.

Currently, a powerful psychological warfare operation (PsyOp) is in place to convince diehard Republicans that Trump will not be the solution to the problem. I hope that when the true conservatives among the Republicans discover their mistake it would not be too late to correct it.

What Professor Tushnet seemingly ignores is that the “progressive” (I call them “regressives”) Leftists waging the Culture War against us are not winning because of their cleverness, insight and intelligence, but because of the hidden support of the most reactionary Right, including Republican traitors, is giving them. Proof of it is that the so-called gains of the progressive Left – gay rights, women’s rights, sexual liberation, social justice, pro-abortion laws, open borders, affirmative action, forced integration in schools, free trade, globalization – came hand in hand with huge economic inequality, destruction of the working and farming classes, further obscene enrichment of the one percent, iniquitous exploitation of workers and farmers in Third World countries, corporate crime, pervasive government corruption, massive unemployment, a police state, government-sponsored terrorism, widespread surveillance, loss of personal freedom and unending imperialist wars to protect the interests of bankers and corporations.

This is not the result of happenstance or chance. Unknowingly, Liberal “progressives” became the useful fools manipulated by the corporate and banking elites they claim to hate to implement their communo-fascist New Gay World Order – which is anything but Leftist or progressive by any stretch of the imagination.

Tushnet believes the cultural war is over, and they won it. Apparently he is still immersed in the false reality created by the “progressive” Left. I’ll bet that he faithfully reads the New Yorker and New York Times, listens to NPR News and watches NBC. So, he ignores that currently there is an awakening of the American people and people all around the world who are sick and tired of being manipulated and lied to. He also seemingly ignores that, if Trump reaches the White House, one of the first things he will do is open an investigation about Barry Soetoro and, once the impostor is proven guilty of his many crimes and sent to jail to join Hillary, all the executives orders he signed will be nullified and the corrupt judges he has appointed will be automatically fired.

The second thing Trump will most likely do is to open a truly impartial investigation of the 9/11 events – which will end up by sending Bush, Cheney and some neocons to join their buddies Barry and Hillary. Hopefully, we will finally find a good use for Guantanamo.

Tushnet is dead wrong. The Culture War is not over; actually it has just begun.

Previously there was no war in the strict sense, because one section of the American people didn’t know there was a war being conducted against them. But now we know, and it is time to launch a devastating PsyWar counterattack to force the conspirators to face reality.

One conclusion one may arrive at after reading Tushnet's piece is that the communo-fascist "Liberals" don't see us just as opponents they have to take political power from. Like genocidal war criminal General William Sherman, who advocated the extermination, not the coexistence with Native Americans, the progressive Left sees us as enemies they have to conquer, enslave and destroy.

So, I think that, following Tushnet's advice, once we win this war we should treat the losers the same way he advises his lefty friends to treat us.

Nobody has won a war on the defensive. It is time to give the communo-fascist elitists a taste of their own medicine.

It takes two to tango.
