

How Can We Be “Numero Uno” With These Numbing Numbers?

Did you ever hear of “carrying capacity” or do you understand the implications of exceeding it? If not, it’s not surprising, as that concept has not carried the day in any way. That concept went out the window when we decided to carry the world on our shoulders and shoulder the burdens of everyone in it. We have now suddenly awakened to the dangers of illegal immigration, but continue to soft pedal legal immigration, which constitutes a clear and present danger. It is a long term threat that can terminate our existence as anything resembling what this nation was meant to be at the start, that is, a White Christian nation. We’ve invited in many varieties and colors of upstarts who are starting to displace us, who have no concept of how we started out, and couldn’t care less.

We’re hardly ever directly or expressly told what the legal immigration numbers are and the related numbers allocated or permitted to come from particular nations or sections of the world, or the age profiles of the putative future participants in our so-called democracy. Few are so bold as to start probing, asking questions, and thus creating problems for themselves by considering these numbers as a problematic issue. We hear all this talk about “sustainability” with no sense of how we are to sustain ourselves with our shrinking farmlands and sustained increases in our numbers.

Learning of the numbers arriving here legally from the various points of the compass, points to the feeling that we are in a zero sum game, with each nationality or special group trying to elbow out the others to get their unfair share of the bounty, while the billionaire kingpins keep drumming into us the idea that there are no limits to what we can absorb and still call the emerging maelstrom and crowded mess as a form of progress vice a regression. Maybe these kingpins are relying on the killing and thinning effects of the Covid vaccines and boosters to boost the numbers who thus die off, so that our numbers can stay within a range acceptable to them.

We have 350 million humans and their pets in the US today, and it is projected that their numbers will continue to rise exponentially despite the recently decreasing birthrates. At what point do our water resources run dry, especially with states in the southwest all competing for lessening amounts of water what with reservoirs gradually evaporating, burgeoning population increases, and a long-term drought in effect. Many residents in these states are hell bent on deriving pleasure from pot which is increasingly potent, readily available, and require enormous amounts of "potable" water to grow, it, more than for other domesticated plants.

Even in 2025, you must reserve a campground spot months in advance. and if you are lucky you might get one at a national park, or even a local park, as more and more people seek the pleasures of the outdoor experience and there are just more people, period. Right now, there are 3 to 4 mile long lines waiting to see the boiling pots and heated pools at Yellowstone, and its only going to get worse. Everyone, including(and probably especially) the invaders burns fuel, uses endless amounts of water, and devours food, many in increasingly fattening amounts.

We add one million legal immigrants annually to the American population, and this number has not varied very much over the course of generations. The mantra for feeding mouths from the 4 corners of the earth continues apace, if not mounts. The latest meme making the rounds is that increasing legal immigration will provide the younger workers whose taxes will support the pensions of retirees, boost economic growth, and maintain our global dominance, collapses under scrutiny. You will eventually have to similarly support the new coterie of younger people when they retire, so that argument is absurd. Immigration may raise total GNP by adding more consumers, but it lowers the GNP per capita, so that as the economic pie grows, each slice shrinks. Another piece of poop is that we need we need foreign workers to solve labor shortages.

The shortages themselves are frequently caused by immigration itself. More people means more need for housing, school administrators, teachers, and medical personnel. Where genuine shortages exist, the onus should be on employers to offer higher wages, benefits, training and advancement opportunities instead of relying on a constant round of replaceable and cheap foreign labor. Then, there's the old canard that the US is enriched by diversity, but no data or studies support this. Quite the contrary, all evidence shows that diversity lessens cohesion and social interaction, and creates a Tower of babel atmosphere.
