

If You Want to See America's Future, Look at Dearborn, Michigan

To give you a stark example of “terrorism” in America, my last commentary elucidated the onslaught of Islam in America. Its tentacles grow from Lewiston, Maine with Somalians living off American taxpayers to Minneapolis where they’re stealing billions off Americans. Those “Islamic Tentacles” extend to Miami through Chicago to Denver and into Dallas, Texas. Those tentacles continue to strangle America by digging into our political systems where their numbers overwhelm our ability to stop them.

In a FB post, an unknown author reported on Dearborn, Michigan’s complete “takeover” by Muslims. It only took 30 years, but Muslims now “own” Dearborn, lock, stock and barrel. If you are an American, you are not welcome in that city. How do I know? I worked in Dearborn for 20 years. I saw it firsthand.

The author said, “America’s future isn’t decided in DC.” Wrong! Washington DC bureaucrats, (along with Muslim liar Barack Obama), imported over 4,000,000 Muslims thinking that they and their Islamic religion would assimilate into the American way of life. Wrong! Instead, they are using our laws to subvert our laws, and install their Sharia Law--the most violent, savage and barbaric “Law” ever conceived on this planet. No other religion is as deadly as Islam. No other religion hates women as much as Islam.

So, here's a picture of what's coming. You've seen it in all of Europe, but now, it's here in America. The only way to stop it, is to ban Sharia Law, deport those who advocate it, and ban any aspect of terrorist Islamic law:

It's decided on streets like Maple Street in Dearborn, Michigan. You don't need a passport to see what's coming. You only need to drive down a street like Maple Street. Once, places like this were the most ordinary neighborhoods in America – peeling paint, rusted mailboxes, quiet porches, families who knew each other by name. The houses are the same. But the culture inside them isn't.

At the end of the block – where the hardware store used to be – the signs glow in the Arabic language most of the old neighbors can't read. The storefronts run on a rhythm that didn't exist here twenty years ago. Nothing exploded. No takeover. No dramatic moment. Just a quiet transfer of identity – one cradle, one household, one generation at a time. Today, you hear five calls daily for Islamic prayers over loudspeakers in Dearborn. It's an assault on Christianity and any other religion.

Here's the truth:

When the old population stops replacing itself, a new population always will. And when that new population doesn't assimilate into the old one, the old one disappears. No city shows this more clearly than Dearborn, Michigan.

Thirty years ago, Dearborn could have been any Midwestern suburb. Today, 40% plus of the city is Muslim. Arabic is spoken in a majority of homes in several neighborhoods. Entire commercial districts operate in Arabic. City councils now reflect a population that didn't exist two generations ago. That didn't happen through conflict.

It happened because assimilation is not automatic – it's something a confident nation demands and a healthy culture reinforces. And here's the part everyone knows but won't say: Some groups assimilate. Muslims don't.

And it has nothing to do with race. The Irish did it. The Italians did it. The Poles did it. The Greeks did it. The Jews did it. The Germans did it. The French did it. The Hungarians did it. They kept their food. They kept their festivals.

They kept their grandparents' accents, old-country jokes, and Sunday rituals. The Italians kept pasta at Thanksgiving – but they still called themselves Americans. The Irish kept their parades and saints' days – but they still called themselves Americans. The Poles kept their Christmas Eve feasts – but they still called themselves Americans.

They didn't build a country inside a country. They brought their tradition. But they adopted the American identity.

Because they understood something we've forgotten: You can keep your heritage and still join the nation. You can honor where you came from without rewriting where you are. That model worked for 250 years.

But in city after city today, we're watching the opposite:

Groups arriving not to join the American story, but to recreate the one they left behind – language, customs, politics, religious governance – layered over a shrinking population that no longer believes in its own identity. And because their families are bigger... because their birth rates are higher... because their cultural ties are tighter... Math outruns nostalgia. Identity outruns memory.

And the old culture fades inside its own ZIP code. You can call that uncomfortable. But you can't call it untrue. Dearborn isn't the exception. It's the preview. Here are more "Dearborn" cities exploding with Muslims.

Hamtramck. Minneapolis. Paterson. Queens. Northern Virginia. South Philadelphia. Aurora, Colorado. Houston's 5th Ward.

Different cities. Same slope. Same math. Same quiet tipping point. Aging American populations. Falling birth rates. Parallel identities growing faster than shared ones. Institutions shifting to serve the new majority. It doesn't feel like a "replacement" when it's happening. It feels like nothing... and then suddenly it feels like everything.

People didn't vote for this. They didn't debate it. It wasn't on a ballot. It happened because one community stopped having children...and another never stopped.

You don't lose a country with bullets. You lose it with birthrates. Walk down Maple Street now and you can feel it: The porch lights are the same – but the culture is not. A country doesn't disappear in gunfire. It disappears in quiet moments – one empty cradle, one closed church, one untranslated sign at a time.

Remember the canary in the coal mine? The canary wasn't there to panic anyone. It was there to warn them while the air was still breathable. America is not England or all of Europe that is now dominated by Muslims. But the math is the same. The curve is the same. And the stakes are the same. Assimilation works when the host culture is strong enough to absorb newcomers. But not with Islamic followers. They NEVER assimilate.

Because they don't, you don't get unity – you get parallel nations sharing the same land and drifting in different directions. Our country isn't lost in a single moment. It's lost gradually, quietly, invisibly...until the place you thought you knew becomes a place you recognize only by name. If you know someone who needs to understand this, share it with them now.

It's the map – the one every American should see before the next decade arrives. It's the turning point... the moment you can't unsee once it's explained. Do you see a Maple Street in your own town? Read it. Save it. Share it. Prepare for it. Because Islam is coming to your city. Those people are on a mission to conquer America as they have conquered Europe. (Thank you to the FB author)

It's going to get really ugly.

Solutions: we need a total ban on Islamic Law, Sharia Law and any organization that is Islamic like the Muslim Brotherhood, or C.A.I.R. When Muslims chant, "Death to America", we need to deport them. We need to enforce a 20 year "pause" on all immigration. We need to maintain our country, our laws, our culture, our way of life. We need to vote in representatives that cherish our nation more than the insanity of mass immigration, especially Muslim immigration.

The wise philosopher Arnold J. Toynbee said, "Great nations don't die by the sword; they die by their own hand of suicide."
