

Look Who Wants to Run the World

When I was in grade school, our local police force used to send Sgt. Rieder into the classroom once a year to remind us to steer clear of strangers. If an adult you didn't know offered you candy, or a ride in his car, whatever, you should bolt on out of there and tell your parents; and they should call the police. I had to do that, once: and an officer came to our house to get whatever information I could give him. I never heard anything more about it, but at least I'd done what I was supposed to do.

We all knew, because we'd been told by our parents, our teachers, and the police, that there were bad people out there who meant to do us harm. To the best of my knowledge, that was never allowed to happen in our town.

But times have changed.

Recently the United Nations formally proposed that all sexual activity—yes, all—should be “decriminalized”. This would include sex with “minors”—children, that is. But only, of course, if a child “consented” to it. That would make it OK. Well, OK with the UN, at least.

Wasn't this the very thing that Sgt. Rieder warned us about? Suddenly we're in a world where the kind of people the police used to warn us against are now almost to the point of running a global government. "Want some candy, little boy?" We were taught to run away from that! But now the United Nations is promoting it.

As for our teachers warning us off—have you heard of public schools offering "After-school Satan Clubs"? They've even got a commercial for it. Catchy tune, "Satan's Not an Evil Guy." Satan stands for... "Science"! And "truth." And "fun." These clubs have been popping up in public schools throughout the country. "And by the way," says the jingle, "there is no Hell." What a relief. Just do as thou wilt, and there's no eternal punishment. If your neighborhood school doesn't have this yet, just wait—they'll get around to you someday.

Defund the police and fund the After-school Satan Club. How did we ever wind up here? With the people we were taught to run away from now running the store. It happened right before our eyes and no one stopped it. Now we don't know if it can be stopped. Now it's the teachers encouraging little children to clamor for "gender reassignment." Our school tax dollars pay for it. And if you've heard of schools keeping this little caper with the children a secret from their parents—well, that's another thing that seems to be happening a lot.

The teachers' unions are not going to change their minds about this. Neither is the UN. The only thing we can do, to the extent that we can do anything at all, is to pull the children out of the public schools —take them away from the groomers.

Because now the predators who used to offer children candy if they'd only climb into the car have wealth, power, and a hankering for other people's kiddies.
