

Trump v. Musk

Two Cocks Never Do Well in the Same Barnyard. But There's More...

Could it spread to Florida?

Donald Trump and Elon Musk are two of the world's most powerful and successful businessmen. Both are far more accustomed to giving orders than taking them. We are very lucky to have both of them trying to help our nation out of the unfathomable messes handed us by the Obama and Obama/Biden administrations.

One of the roosters needs to grow up, and it is Musk. Elon, we did NOT elect you., but we know the tune to which you dance.

In the last week, the press and bloggers everywhere have been all about the blow-up between Musk and Trump. If you read or watch ANYTHING, you've heard of it. Must had come to the end of his agreed-upon DOGE (Dept. Of Govt. Efficiency) efforts, and apparently didn't agree with everything Trump has done.

President Trump has said that Musk knew how the Big Beautiful Bill was being assembled and agreed, until he learned that the EV (electric vehicle) support was to be cut. Then, Elon began acting like a business owner. Surprised? I'm not. Money talks, and Elon has a long track record of listening.

When the attacks on Tesla's, Tesla dealerships and even charging stations began, the Tesla balance sheet took a hit. BUT, when Musk started to attack the President, the bottom started to drop out. I'm guessing that Elon did NOT figure on that.

It is calculated that Tesla lost $150 billion in market cap (stock price) when Musk began to attack Trump!

Market Watch calculates the loss to be nearing $200 billion. BILLION. Even to one of the world's wealthiest men, THAT amount is important.

Do not be surprised if Musk decides to change his tune. Money talks. Did Musk underestimate the support for Donald Trump around the world?? I think so.

Donald Trump took a big risk in inviting Musk into the initial months of his second presidency. He did so because he knows very well, if anyone alive does, how valuable is time and how much he had to accomplish in a precious short time. He took the risk, which many including Steve Bannon, did NOT think was smart.

I admit to wondering, but did not feel qualified to second guess – for the moment at least – Donald Trump. Musk had been with the Left, until he pulled a dramatic switch and donated over $280 million to Trump and the Republican run, via the National Musk's own Grok AIX says total donations were approximately $290 million:

America PAC: Musk contributed approximately $239 million to America PAC, a super PAC he founded to support Trump's campaign. This included $118.6 million before October 17, 2024, and an additional $120 million between October 17 and November 25, 2024, with $75 million of that donated before Election Day. RBG PAC: Musk donated $20.5 million to RBG PAC, a group that ran ads defending Trump's abortion stance, with the donation made on October 24, 2024. Other Contributions: Musk gave $10 million to the Senate Leadership Fund, $3 million to the MAHA Alliance PAC (supporting Robert F. Kennedy Jr.'s "Make America Healthy Again" message), nearly $1 million to the Trump 47 Committee, $2.3 million to the Sentinel Action Fund, and approximately $289,000 to the National Republican Congressional Committee. Total Donations: Estimates of Musk's total contributions to Trump and related Republican causes range from $260 million to $290 million, with some sources citing up to $291 million.

NOW, the losses at Tesla alone, so far, are closing in on the total amount that the reformed Leftist donated to Republican efforts.

After Musk left government service, he started to complain. First it was disagreement with the Big Beautiful Bill. Instead of talking to some Republican leaders, to whom he'd donated, Elon began to act more like his 5-year-old son, X, whom he toted everywhere in the first weeks of ; a pretty obvious ploy to reach us "common folk." He started screeching on social media.

There are no reports as to whether or not Elon started to pick his nose in public, like little "X".

Then, escalating his angst, Musk stuck out his tongue and put out a picture of Trump with some girls, all very properly dressed btw, at Epstein's island, which picture had been around for years. Musk called it "really big bomb".

Guess Elon forgot that even leftist Newsweek wrote, There is no evidence that Trump visited Epstein's notorious Little St. James island, where the late financier is alleged to have trafficked and sexually abused young women and girls. Trump has also never been implicated in the offenses committed by Epstein or Maxwell.

The references to Trumps (father and/or sons) having been on the Epstein plane's flight log, covered flights between Florida and NYC, NOT to Epstein's Island. Seems strange that Musk could have forgotten something so key... Guys like Elon Musk usually do NOT forget much. So think about this...

Might all of this has more to do with sinking the BBB and electing Casey DeSantis to replace Ron as Governor of Florida?? I am NOT a Donald's fan, but this might be worse.. There are several good men who may run for the Florida Governorship. Might the evidence of Musk Money back them down?

AND, once again, might the citizens of Florida have massive infusions of campaign monies dictate their governance?

Massey had endorsed DeGov for POTUS, and Paul never did endorse Donald Trump. Suddenly Ron DeSantis jumped on the X-wagon this morning, and vowed not to back down against Congress's support of wasteful spending. Thus, allying himself with the Musk viewpoint.

Check out Laura Loomer's X account on the subject. I picked it up for you on The Conservative Treehouse, because I couldn't find it on X.

Neither Massey nor Ron Paul like the BBB. And we KNOW DeSantis does not like Donald Trump.

Might Casey Desantis get a boost in her bid for Florida Governor, and a bit of money from Elon? Time will tell, but, once again, it would not be support and donations from the citizens of Florida which would choose their next governor. "Dark" or not, Governor Ronald DeSantis knows that money from Elon could buy Casey an undeserved governorship, and keep himself in the political limelight for future Presidential runs.

Normally, when two big roosters are in the same hen yard, there is fighting. The altercations between Musk and Trump were to be expected. The aftermath may include more than we'd bargained.

I was ready to close this off and leave it to a struggle between two powerful men, until I saw the DeSantis tweet. When a little banty rooster (one 1/4 – 1/2 the size of the big guys) tries to get into the fray, things could get messy.

Watch closely, Florida. The RON PAC is still around and full of all sorts of Dark money. The cock fight in DC may spread its dirt far afield.

Post Script: Musk is backing down; Trump not yet... Stay tuned.
