

Trump's Judge Gonzalo Curiel a suspected lawbreaker and racist

"Today's U.S. justice system has been turned upside-down by the progressives in both political parties: lawyers who help suspects break laws are elevated to federal court benches; candidates for president of the United States are undergoing criminal investigations for alleged actions perpetrated while serving as a cabinet member; and the entire Justice Department finds clamping-down on institutions and businesses to allow transgendered people access to ladies' toilets is more important than investigating suspicious activity by Muslims." – Chief of Police Geoffrey Lionel Lawtonson (Ret.).

On Tuesday night, American men and women from all backgrounds and all races stood up together and cast their ballots in delegate-rich states of California and New Jersey for Donald Trump as the Republican Party's nominee for President. Many of his supporters say that Trump has united our nation after eight years of Barack Obama's racially and economically divisive political agenda behind a singular vision: Trump's AMERICA FIRST.

As Donald Trump said in his victory speech: "I understand the responsibility of carrying the mantle and I will never, ever let you down."

Unfortunately, the news media preferred to cover Trump's media battle with Judge Gonzalo Curiel taking the side of the Obama-appointed federal jurist. What they failed to cover is the fact Curiel broke the very laws he swore to protect and enforce. By this own admission, Judge Curiel helped an illegal alien get a scholarship to an American university, thereby aiding and abetting a lawbreaker.

Judge Curiel has been praised for such alleged illegal actions that were used by the Bush administration to arrest and incarcerate U.S. businessmen who were frequently targeted by the Immigration and Customs Enforcement directorate of the Homeland Security Department.

Many may argue that fetching a hefty scholarship for an illegal alien is not the same as hiring one, but the argument is an example of political chicanery. The man who hires an illegal alien and the man who helps an illegal alien secure a reward that's denied to many American students are aiding and abetting a lawbreaker. During the Bush administration, when immigration laws had some semblance of enforcement, many business owners or managers stood before federal judges to answer for the alleged crimes. With Judge Curiel, it is the judge – a lawyer-in-black robes – who should be charged or at least removed from the bench to disregarding a law he swore to uphold.

For example, a Texas businessman who employed an illegal alien charged with capital murder in connection with the shooting death of Houston Police Department Officer Rodney Johnson, was arrested and charged with harboring an illegal alien here. The case was investigated by US Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) and the Houston Police Department, and rightly so.

Robert Lane Camp, 47, who owned Camp Landscaping in Deer Park, Texas, was charged with encouraging Juan Leonardo Quintero-Perez, the accused killer of Officer Johnson, to unlawfully enter and remain in the United States, and also with harboring the illegal immigrant Quintero-Perez. The complaint was filed in federal court following an investigation by ICE special agents and the Houston Police Department. Camp surrendered to federal authorities at the U. S. Marshals Service where he was arrested.

Meanwhile in Ohio, ICE agents arrested the owner of a restaurant on felony charges of harboring illegal aliens after 10 of his illegal workers were apprehended. In Arkansas, agents arrested the owner of a construction business on felony charges and apprehended 27 of his illegal workers.

“ICE is taking an increasingly tough stance against egregious corporate violators that knowingly employ illegal aliens. Bringing criminal charges against these unscrupulous employers and targeting their ill-gotten gains is a tactic we are adopting nationwide,” said ICE Assistant Secretary Julie L. Myers in 2006.

In fiscal year 2006, DHS arrested 445 individuals on criminal charges in work site investigations and apprehended another 2,700 of their illegal workers on immigration violations. During all of fiscal year 2005, ICE arrested 176 individuals on criminal charges for aiding and abetting illegal workers and another 1,116 illegal aliens in these cases.

As NewsWithViews.com digs deeper into Judge Curiel’s background and work history, it may be discovered that Trump is absolutely right about the Obama judge who gave thousands of dollars in campaign contributions to the Democratic Party.

Hillary Clinton Proposes Same Wall and Deportations Without Media Outrage

“Build a wall, deport illegal aliens, Mexico is literally sending people across the border” – Sen. Hillary Clinton 2006

While the Democrats, the Republican establishment, Judge Gonzalo Curiel, and the corrupt reporters in the news media became enraged over presidential hopeful Donald Trump’s border security plan that includes the construction of a large wall on the U.S.-Mexican border, there wasn’t a peep when Hillary Clinton called for the same thing.

The short-memory-prone news media forget how the presumed Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton and her party cohorts took every opportunity to bash then President George W. Bush over his Homeland Security Department's lack of border security between Mexico and southwestern states.

Not only did Hillary Clinton beat the drum calling for more deportations of illegal aliens, she also sounded the alarm that the United States required a state-of-the-art physical security program to keep Mexicans out of the U.S.

A video from the popular Council on Foreign Relations (see first video) shows Hillary Clinton clearly calling for deportations and the building of a "physical barrier" to keep illegal aliens from crossing the Mexicans-U.S. borders and plaguing the southwest states such as Texas, Arizona, New Mexico and others.

In fact, the news media – who have always adored Mrs. Clinton and her husband Bill to the point of running dishonest stories about them – praised Clinton for taking a tougher stand on U.S. sovereignty than President Bush.

In addition, two Democratic governors – Elliott Richardson of New Mexico and Janet Napolitano of Arizona – announced a state of emergency and posted National Guard troops on their borders with Mexico. Most observers believed it was just another ploy to make Bush look bad since Richardson sent only 12 troops to the border and Napolitano sent about half that many.

In one of the videos, Hillary alleges that the policies of Mexico's Vicente Fox are pushing illegal aliens across our border and she is heard stating that the U.S. needs to "secure its borders with physical barriers." She also called for tougher sanctions against those who hire illegals or those aid and abet illegals in staying in the U.S.

"Hillary Clinton's 2006 speech would surely upset President Fox who all but physically attacked Donald Trump over his proposal to build a barrier at the border and deport illegal aliens. But when Clinton spoke, Fox and his echo chamber kept their mouths shut,” reminds former police officer Iris Aquino, now a security consultant and terrorism analyst. “The media also kept their mouths shut because they know Clinton is a liar and will say whatever she thinks will garner votes,” Aquino added.

Alas, not one major news outlet – print or broadcast – bothered to look for the videos in this news story and even if they had found them a sure bet would be they’d ignore it or bury it on their web sites to “cover their butts,” notes political strategist Mike Baker. “But the videos are here and they show Hillary Clinton talking tough on border security and illegal immigration,” said Baker.
