

“UFOs” Generate “BALLOONEY” From the FEDGOV

This is a tale of tell-tale “ballooney” which should have been apparent early-on. Some simple analysis shows that none of the expert analysts were consulted in deciphering the nature of the alleged balloons that recently traversed North America; alternatively, they knew the score and treated the populace like a bunch of buffoons who could be safely left baffled by the phenomena and since they were unaccustomed to thinking, the GovMint explanations could be safely passed over their heads without serious challenge.

By way of background to those not grounded in the earth sciences, a balloon used in atmospheric studies consists of a flexible outer shell filled with gas, which rises in altitude until its weight is equal to the weight of the atmosphere it displaces. The Chinese balloon that recently invaded North American airspace and coasted over our continent from the west coast to the east coast before it was rendered “toast”, was spherical, about 250 feet in diameter, and maintained an altitude of about 60,000 feet. Also, suspended beneath it was something far larger than carried by weather balloons.

Knowing the density of the air at 60,000 feet and the dimensions of the balloon, it should have been a simple exercise to determine the approximate weight of the electronic equipment on board. That, in itself should have been a clue as to the nature of that equipment and its mission – that is, if it wasn't really a weather balloon – but this doesn't appear to have been done, or, in the alternative, Americans weren't told that it had been done.

Once a weather balloon is aloft, it will typically move along with the direction of the surrounding wind currents. That doesn't appear to have been the case with the Chinese balloon, which seems to have been able to move independently of and AGAINST the surrounding air; that is, it was obviously self-propelled. Certainly, it did not appear to follow upper-air streams or the Jet Stream, but, rather, it began a northeast path across the Pacific Ocean from China to Alaska, and then changed direction after crossing Alaska into Canada turning southeast to travel over Montana and eventually Kansas when it again turned east on a path from Missouri to South Carolina before it was shot down off the coast of that State and fell into the Atlantic. This voyage allowed the craft to go over or go very close to several sensitive military installations including ICBM installations and Strategic Air Force bases where by some means it could obtain information about what was contained within these installations.

The public was deceived when we were told that President Biden had originally ordered the balloon shot down, but had been dissuaded by his military advisors because of the possible dangers to civilians from falling debris. Of course, this made no sense as shooting down a small balloon over the sparsely inhabited ranch-land of Montana – or the equally unpopulated farmland of Kansas or Missouri posed little risk to their inhabitants. It could (and should) also have been brought down to Earth slowly and in one piece by shooting it with non-explosive projectiles, thus allowing it to slowly deflate and gradually descend. It could also have been “captured” by a helicopter with a drag line insuring that the whole package could have been brought to earth undamaged. Instead, it was obliterated with a $400,000 air-to-air missile. In other words, our government permitted the mission of the balloon to be accomplished before it was brought down in such a way as to ensure no agency could learn anything about it and have to answer to the American people for the way the whole matter was handled – though, of course, our present government seldom if ever answers to “the American people.”

The debris from the balloon fell over a seventy square mile area, and into 45 feet of water, all of which makes any effort to learn what it was and what it was doing practically impossible. Recovering its electronic components will be difficult if not impossible, but of course that was the very reason why the Biden Administration waited until its mission was accomplished before bringing it down. It should be obvious by now, even to our Democrat dolts and the sheeple that elected them that Joe Biden is not only compromised in his dealings with Red China, he is OWNED by that evil country.
