

What Do They Want, In The End?

What would America be like, if the Far Left got everything they say they want?

Thanks to America's bloated, overfunded "higher education" system, we are able to get a few glimpses into that chamber of horrors. As a class, America's college professors are all on board the wacko express. They try hard to "teach" their students to be as out-to-lunch as they are.

As part of a recent "Social Justice Lecture Series"—students got extra credit for sitting through these sessions—a Diablo Valley College political science professor exhorted students to "violate the laws" and "abolish white democracy". Your tuition dollars at work!

According to the prof, "We exist in a white supremacist, patriarchal, heteronormative, capitalist system," and it's just got to be fundamentally transformed into... well, what?

There must be several dozen genuine white supremacists in America, who never had it so good. Not so long ago, they were a handful of ineffectual nobodies. Now they're the boogie man. Our colleges have painted them out to be several hundred times more important than they are.

Okay, Far Left America won't have any role for white people anymore. Except maybe to keep on paying taxes and cheerfully taking the blame for anything that's wrong in anybody else's life.

Gotta get rid of that patriarchy, too—whatever it is. The only thing worse than a man is a white man.

But that heteronormativity stuff, that's infinitely worse! The only thing worse than a white man is a non-gay white man. I'm not sure what the leftists want to do about heteronormativity. Make homosexuality compulsory? Bob Hope was only joking, when he mentioned it some fifty years ago. But the Left is not known for its sense of humor.

And of course capitalism has got to go. It causes Income Inequality. It causes Global Warming. It causes people to have jobs they don't like—something that never happens under communism. That it also provides thousands of brainless university professors with a damned nice living doesn't seem to inspire any gratitude.

“Democracy” will be out, too. White people ruined it. Maybe they could set up a really inclusive form of democracy that excludes white people. That might work.

To bring about these utopian conditions, says the prof, college students have to get into the habit of violating the law. A few killjoys have pointed out that the professor never said which laws ought to be violated. Did he leave that out simply because his whole schtick is half-baked, muddle-headed, and incoherent? Or did he mean to suggest that all laws should be violated? Because he refuses to be interviewed, it's hard to guess what he really meant. Possibly he doesn't know.

Still, a society with no written laws ought to appeal to leftists. If you don't have a criminal code on the books where anyone can read it, then any act, or any failure to act, is potentially a crime and may be punished as such. This is great for keeping the deplorables in line. If you never know when they're going to drag you off to jail for something you never knew was against the law, or for not doing something that they say you should have done—hey, it worked for the Soviet Union, didn't it? They just love to hear someone crying “What did I do? What did I do?” as he's being propped up for the firing squad or sentenced to a stint of Sensitivity Training. It's what made Mao Tse-tung's Red Guards tick.

So violate all the laws until there is no law except for whatever the Party says happens to be the law on any given day. Keep everybody guessing.

It would be interesting to ask the parents of these students what they think they're getting for their money. We could also ask whether this kind of "education" does our country any good; but I think we already know the answer.

I have discussed these and other topics throughout the week on my blog, <http://leeduigon.com> . Stop in and visit. A single click will take you there.

© 2018 Lee Duigon – All Rights Reserved

E-Mail Lee Duigon: leeduigon@verizon.net